People need to have money for their daily life. A visually impaired person also needs to use banknotes for daily transactions. It is observed that people are not well aware of the features contained in the banknotes. In this consideration, currency notes need to possess some features apart from that of the security issue for the benefit of the visually impaired persons. I would like to take the opportunity to appreciate the endeavor by International Institute of Currency Technology (IICT) to organize a seminar exclusively for the visually impaired person to educate them on how to recognize currency notes. I strongly believe that "1st Global Awareness Program on Banknote for the Blind" will be beneficial for the Society in general and create a sense of awareness for the visually impaired person in particular by raising their level of self-confidence in exchanging banknotes while making transactions.

I wish this seminar a success.
